November 20, 2026 – Old Crow Medicine Show has announced the exclusive RSD Black Friday release of Union Made: Overtime, the companion piece to their acclaimed new album from this summer. The band continues their celebration of America's 250th year with a collection of unreleased tracks from the Union Made sessions, along with special live covers of songs from some of the country's greatest songwriters including Johnny Cash, Tom Petty, The Highwaymen and Bob Weir, who appears on their live performance of "Cumberland Blues" recorded at Lockn' Festival in 2019. Today, the band shared a sneak peek at the exclusive vinyl-only release with their new single "Climb," available to stream on YouTube.

"Sometimes, after a long shift, you might feel like putting in a few extra hours just to say you did it," says bandleader Ketch Secor. "Old Crow medicine Show's Overtime project reflects a lifelong commitment to the work of performing American roots music. We hope that this batch of songs that were in heavy contention for our recent Union Made project will find a place in your heart – from me and all the Old Crows, still hard at it, even nearly three decades in."

Released this summer, Union Made reached the #1 spot on the Americana Albums chart for three weeks, and the single "Last American Waltz" feat. Molly Tuttle held the #1 spot on the Americana Singles chart for four weeks. Secor shared more insight into the band's 'love letter' to America with NPR's All Things Considered, and the album garnered praise from Relix, The Bluegrass Situation, BrooklynVegan, Whiskey Riff and more.

The two-time GRAMMY-winning string band released their first-ever holiday album OCMS XMAS last year to widespread acclaim from The New York Times, NPR's Fresh Air and Billboard, with appearances on CBS This Morning and World Cafe. Last month, the group released OCMS XMAS Deluxe to streaming and shared their new single "San Francisco Christmas" featuring The Secret Sisters.

In 2025, Secor also released his first solo album Story The Crow Told Me, appeared on Rolling Stone's Nashville Now podcast, and made his debut as the host of the long-running Nashville PBS travel and culture series Tennessee Crossroads. His Louder Than Guns documentary premiered nationwide on the PBS App and was highlighted in Rolling Stone's summer print edition.

Family, friends and the Dallas community honored the award-winning actress and beloved IBOC Church Mother on November 24

DALLAS, November 13, 2026 – Celebration of Life Memorial services for acclaimed actress Dr. Irma P. Hall was held Tuesday, November 24, at Inspiring Body of Christ Church (IBOC) in Dallas. Hall, an award-winning actress, beloved Dallas resident and longtime Church Mother at IBOC, passed away November 10 at age 91, surrounded by loved ones. Guests will be welcomed with a special red carpet legacy tribute featuring a museum-style exhibition of photographs, memorabilia and career highlights celebrating Dr. Irma P. Hall's extraordinary journey as an actress, educator and trailblazer. The public, fellow actors, industry colleagues and all whose lives were touched by Dr. Hall were invited to attend and join in celebrating her extraordinary life and legacy.

Best known for her portrayal of "Big Mama Jo" in the 1997 film Soul Food, Hall built a remarkable career spanning five decades in film, television and theater. Her credits include A Family Thing, Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil, Beloved, The Ladykillers, Collateral and Tyler Perry's Meet the Browns. She earned a NAACP Image Award for Soul Food and a Jury Prize at the 2004 Cannes Film Festival for The Ladykillers and was inducted into the Texas Film Hall of Fame.

Before her Hollywood career, Hall spent more than two decades teaching in Dallas public schools. Texas College later awarded her an honorary doctorate in Fine Arts and Education at a ceremony held at IBOC. An avid supporter of the arts and education, she helped establish the Dallas Minority Repertory Theatre. At IBOC, she participated in the theater ministry and frequently read to children at the church's University of Dreams school.

Pastor Rickie G. Rush shared a special connection with Hall that spanned decades, beginning when he was just 14 years old and she was his public speaking teacher. During one of their lessons, she told him, "One day, you will be my pastor," a prediction that would eventually come to pass. Following her passing, Pastor Rush reflected: "Our beloved Church Mother, Irma P. Hall, has taken her final bow on the stage of life and stepped into eternity. While we mourn her passing, we are forever grateful for the remarkable legacy she leaves behind."

"She started as a teacher in the classroom but ended up being a teacher to the world," said her only daughter, Irma Hall Crayton, in the family's original statement announcing her passing.

The family extends its heartfelt appreciation for the outpouring of love, prayers and support as they prepare to celebrate her life and legacy.

ABOUT INSPIRING BODY OF CHRIST

Founded in 1990 by Pastor Rickie G. Rush, the Inspiring Body of Christ Church (IBOC) is a Dallas-based non-denominational ministry rooted in the biblical mandate to "envision, engage, and empower" the lives of God's people. What began as a small gathering has flourished into a vibrant, global ministry reaching people from all walks of life. Not just a landmark campus, IBOC is dedicated to the spiritual transformation and holistic development of the community. Under Pastor Rush's visionary leadership, the ministry operates with a servant-first heart, prioritizing hands-on outreach, life-changing biblical education through the University of Dreams, and the restoration of the "least, the last, and the lost." The church is home to the largest privately owned aquarium in the United States and presents a live dive show with certified divers each Sunday following service. By blending practical life application with social responsibility, IBOC remains committed to reflecting the love of Jesus Christ through tangible acts of service that impact the Dallas/Ft. Worth Metroplex and the world beyond.
